Chapter 358

Serenity asked, "Liberty, is everything going well?"

The Hunt sisters walked toward Zachary's car while they talked.

Liberty smiled. "Did you forget what I used to do back then? Work is pretty easy. I was a little rusty at first, but I got my groove back pretty quickly." However, Liberty still did not get along with her colleagues. It might be because of the commotion Liberty caused on the day of the interview. Everyone knew that Liberty was acquainted with Mr. Lewis, so they were being nice to her superficially while behind her back, they gossiped she had a relationship with the CEO. The looks that Liberty got from the female staff were indescribable.

Liberty accidentally overheard her colleagues talking about her when she was in the bathroom.

However, this was only her first day of work. It would eventually get better.

"Zachary."

Liberty greeted her brother-in-law as she got in the car.

Zachary nodded. His eyes then fell on Serenity. Liberty had been there and done that, so she instantly understood her brother-in-law's deep gaze when she saw it. After Liberty got in the back seat, she closed the car door without waiting for Serenity to get in the car.

Serenity did not think much about it and was too lazy to go around – to the other side, so she simply opened the car door and got into the passenger seat.

"Liberty, let's have dinner first, then we'll take you and Sonny home after."

"Okay."

Liberty was in a much better mood now that she had a job.

The Hunt sisters were talking non-stop while on the way to the restaurant.

Zachary was focused on driving, but he also listened in on their conversation.

Since Zachary was buying dinner for his wife and sister-in-law, he would not scrimp and brought them to Wiltspoon Hotel.

As soon as the hotel manager saw Zachary without his bodyguards, he was reminded of Callum's advice. He quickly went aside and turned his back toward Zachary. He was afraid that he would habitually greet Mr. York and lose his job because of it.

"Zachary, you could've just brought us to a typical restaurant. We don't need to dine in such a luxurious place."

Liberty felt a little distressed for her brother-in-law's wallet.

They could forget the formalities since she was not an outsider after all. She would not mind even if they ate at a food truck.

Zachary took the sisters upstairs and entered a private room. "Liberty, our company owns this hotel, so we are entitled to employee discounts when we dine here. It doesn't cost much after the discount."

Liberty smiled and said, "That's good."

Thanks to her sister and brother-in-law, Liberty could sit and dine in the most exclusive hotel in Wiltspoon.

Zachary got the menu and handed it over to Liberty so she could order anything she fancied.

After all, Liberty was his sister-in-law.

Liberty browsed the menu briefly and closed it before handing it over to her sister. "Seren, you choose."

Serenity took the menu and flipped through it as well. She felt that every dish here cost exorbitant. If Zachary had not brought them here, Serenity and Liberty would never have walked into Wiltspoon Hotel for a meal.

Of course, the food at Wiltspoon Hotel was delicious. Serenity still remembered the night she accompanied Jasmine to a dinner party here and tried all the food.

Serenity and Jasmine ate to their hearts' content and almost had to hold onto the wall to walk out. Zachary's eyes were sharp and noticed that the Hunt sisters could not bring themselves to order because the food was costly. He could understand where they were coming from. After Liberty got married, she became a full-time housewife and had no source of income. Her husband was stingy with her, so Liberty had to spend money wisely. Serenity's income was not too shabby, but she was planning to save up for a house of her own in Wiltspoon. That was why she would not spend excessively, which Zachary could tell from the price of her breakfast.

"I'll order then."

Zachary took the menu from his wife and ordered a few dishes with ease. After the waiter noted their order and left, Zachary said to his wife, "I just got a bonus today."

He was implying to Serenity and Liberty that they should eat comfortably and not worry for his wallet.
